John Abbruzzese

John Abbruzzese is an Associate Professor of Philosophy at Providence College, in Providence, RI. As a scholar, John has published articles on seventeenth and eighteenth century philosophers such as René Descartes and David Hume, as well as on contemporary issues in metaphysics, such as the possibility of time travel. As a Vice President of the Faculty Senate, John led contract negotiations with the college administration and facilitated the creation of a more flexible core curriculum to increase students' engagement with their education.

John has served as a member of the teaching team for Harvard Negotiation Institute's summer executive education programs and Harvard Law School's Negotiation Workshop.

John graduated from Providence College in 1995, summa cum laude, with a Bachelor of Arts with Honors in Philosophy and History. He earned a Doctorate in Philosophy in 2002 from Brown University in Providence, RI. John enjoys practicing yoga, watching classic films, and supporting Barcelona in international football. In his free time, he tries his hand at improvisational acting and Mediterranean cooking – though rarely at the same time.
